Secretary of the Interior Will Administer Code of Fair
Competition

LEAVES FOR CAPITAL

Already Holds Important Post of Administrator of Public Works

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Aug. 29.—President Roosevelt today appointed Secretary of the Interior Harold F. Ickes, administrator of the fair competition code for the oil industry under the National Recovery Administration. This action was taken by the chief executive early this morning just before the head of the Interior Department who already holds the important post of administrator of public works, took off for Washington by air after a lengthy conference with the President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 29.—Completion of a code of fair competition for the bituminous coal industry was sought today by National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson on the basis of an informal agreement reached with Appalachian operators and union leaders.

Recognizing that unforeseen obstacles might arise to dash his high hopes, Johnson kept secret the provisions of the agreement upon the principal points at issue.

With today set as the deadline on the writing of a coal code, Johnson worked to bring the long negotiations to a close and send the code to President Roosevelt for approval.

The operators' committee maintained a stony silence, leaving public statements to Johnson, while some officials of the United Mine Workers of America indicated much was to be accomplished before the code could be completed.

Completion of a coal code would bring most of the major industries under the recovery administration. Officials of the United Mine Workers estimated there are 550,000 bituminous coal miners of whom 400,000 are working.

National Recovery officials declared reports from the Blue Eagle drive launched in the nation yesterday, assure co-operation by all sections in the effort to find jobs for millions of people by Labor Day.

A goal of pledges from 20,000,000 consumers is certain to be reached, it was declared. Many towns claimed almost 100 per cent success on the first day in enrolling both employers and consumers.

Burlington Stages Parade Of 45 Fire Companies

BURLINGTON, N. J., Aug. 29.—The interstate firemen's parade held here Saturday was unusually successful. There were 45 companies in line and they traversed the principal streets of the city. Previous to the parade the large aerial truck of Young America Company was housed.

At 3.15 the parade got under way with Marshal Joseph Brotz riding in the car of Bristol Fire Chief James L. McGee. Brotz was accompanied by Samuel Hagerman, assistant chief of the Bristol Department.

The parade was judged as it passed a reviewing stand in front of City Hall. The judges were James L. McGee, chief, Bristol; ex-chief Charles Y. Kniss, Bordentown; former chief Thomas Brown, Florence; Captain F. McGee, Camden; Charles Adair, Stratford; Burlington City fire instructor; R. H. Jones, battalion chief, Camden; Dory Smith, ex-chief Rusling Hose, Trenton.

A new flag-pole and flag were dedicated at the Burlington City Water Works.

The following companies were awarded loving cups: Company coming longest distance, Verona, N. J., 97 miles; most men in line, Riverside, 45; best appearance, Union, Mt. Holly; best apparatus in line, Niagara, Merchantsville; best band, Hopewell, N. J. The Ladies' Auxiliary of Niagara company presented the auxiliaries of the Union, Mt. Holly, and Crosswicks companies with beautiful bouquets of roses for fine appearance. The most comical was the Westville Fire Company in an old auto which resembled a farm wagon, all of the firemen having long gray beards and large straw hats.

The Bristol Consolidated Department was represented by a crew of men and the 1,000-gallon pumper.

FRENCH FACE LOSS UNLESS DEBTS SETTLED

Likely to Lose Large Part of Prospective $5,000,000,000
Wine Market

CALIFORNIA MAY GAIN

By Edward Hunter
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS, Aug. 29.—(INS)—Unless France makes a debt settlement with America, she will lose a large part of a prospective $5,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 a year wine market in the United States. That was the parting warning of Jonett Shouse, president of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, who returned to New York on the steamship Washington.

"Most of the wines and liquors consumed in the first few years after the end of prohibition will have to be imported," said Shouse, "because they require maturing—especially the hard liquor—and that which will be manufactured in the United States immediately after repeal will not be ready for use for several years. I understand that the California wine makers have a stock of wine made before prohibition, but it cannot be large.

"An immediate market for goods worth far more than what France would have to pay on the debts will thus be opened to her by prohibition's repeal.

"Prejudice against France in the United States is so great, because of her debt defaults, that she will certainly not be allowed to touch this market unless a debt settlement is reached.

"A number of congressmen have announced to me their intention to introduce bills placing so high a tariff on French wines and liquors that importation will be impossible. Public sentiment is such that a bill of this kind would certainly be passed.

"This sentiment would be reversed, I think, if France offered to pay the two debt installments she has defaulted, and asked for an adjustment of the balance of what she owes, as England has done."

Shouse predicted that the profits France would make out of the export of wines and liquors would make up the amount paid.

He also declared that after prohibition, while the consumption of liquors will increase, wines and milder drinks would benefit at the expense of hard liquors. Beer is weaning the American populace away from drinks with the kick of a mule, he thought.

He predicted that 36 states will have elected wet conventions by November, and that the 18th Amendment will be repealed in December.

PRESS PAYS TRIBUTE TO HENRY W. WATSON

The press of this vicinity is paying tribute today to the Hon. Henry W. Watson, who for nearly 20 years represented the ninth congressional district in the halls of Congress, and who died at his Langhorne home, Sunday.

Editorial comment follows:

REPRESENTATIVE WATSON
The death of Representative Henry W. Watson at his home in Langhorne on Sunday ended a useful career there and in Congress, by which latter service he will be best remembered. For ten consecutive terms Mr. Watson was elected to represent his district in the national legislature, and the voters of Bucks and Montgomery, and in later years of Bucks and Lehigh Counties, were so well satisfied with him as their spokesman in national policy that the results of the recurring elections were for him, as a rule, a foregone conclusion.

A follower and close associate in politics with ex-Senator Grundy, Mr. Watson was a staunch upholder of the tariff and the economic theories of his party, and his long service in the House gave him a commanding position in the practical work of that body. By his personal influence and power, as well as by the rule of seniority, he was long the titular head of the Pennsylvania delegation, and his varied social, political and business interests in this city as well as in his own County of Bucks, of which he was a native and life-long resident, made Representative Watson one of the best-known men in public life.

—Public Ledger.

CONGRESSMAN WATSON

When death laid its hand on Congressman Henry W. Watson it removed a veteran public servant notable for the fidelity and ability with which he administered his public trust.

No man in Bucks county's history served so long as its Representative in Congress, and none surpassed his record for faithfully, earnestly and energetically serving the interests of his constituents.

Congressman Watson was exceptionally well fitted for his Congressional duties. Trained as a lawyer, a business man and a banker, and with a strong patriotic sense of duty, he ideally met the requirements of that important office.

His qualifications, the quality of his service and his devotion to his office over a long period of years won for him high place in the regard of his colleagues and on the important committees of Congress.

It was these qualifications, undoubtedly, which led in his last campaign, when Bucks and Lehigh counties were combined as a Congressional district, to his re-election over strong Democratic opposition. His training, service and ability were recognized as of the greatest importance to the great industrial and agricultural interests which were involved. He was an expert in tariff legislation, thoroughly convinced of the importance of the protective tariff principle, and an influential advocate of it in the halls of Congress.

However, Mr. Watson's public service was not confined to his Congressional duties. In his home community and as a Bucks countian he had de-

Frame Kitchen at Barone

NO SERIOUS DAMAGE

NEWTOWN, Aug. 29.—Bucks County authorities are still endeavoring to catch the firebug which for the past several months has set fire to barns and houses in the county.

The latest attempt was made here early yesterday when an effort was made to fire the frame kitchen of John Barone, Sr., South Lincoln avenue. Prompt arrival of firemen prevented any serious damage.

This is the second time within the past two weeks that an attempt has been made to destroy Barone's residence. The first attempt was not reported by the family in the hope of catching the firebug should he return.

Barone's son, John, Jr., reported he heard someone in the back of the house shortly after midnight. Inspection of the place after the fire had been extinguished revealed that a large quantity of oil had been poured about the frame kitchen, adjoining the brick house.

The elder Barone is employed by the Trenton Transit Company and has four children.

Use of oil on the Barone house closely connects the attempt to destroy a wagon house on the property of Howard Collins, near Holland Station, at 11.30 o'clock Sunday night. A large quantity of oil had been sprinkled on the building, firemen learned while extinguishing the blaze.

voted a great deal of his time and ability to their interests.

His death leaves a vacancy it will be difficult to fill. Few men have such well rounded preparation for the office of Congressman. His loss as a Representative of long years of service, knowledge of the details of the task, acquaintanceship with men in national life, and the influence he won from long service and high committee places, is irreparable.

CONGRESSMAN WATSON

Henry Winfield Watson died yesterday at his home in Langhorne. He had served the old ninth district consisting of Bucks and Montgomery counties, for eighteen years, and was in the midst of his tenth term, to which he was elected last year by the ninth district, in which Bucks is teamed with Lehigh for the first time.

GROUP IN MARYLAND DURING SEVERE STORM

Saw Much of Interest and Experienced Thrills of Isolation

RETURN HOME SAFELY

Leaving Bristol Sunday, August 20, and returning home Sunday evening, August 27, a group of young women had quite a thrilling experience while vacationing at Ocean City, Maryland.

Members of the "BG" Club of Bristol, chaperoned by Mrs. William Harding, Garden street, spent a week amid the flood scenes of that Maryland resort.

Reaching Ocean City August 20th the Bristol group found it storming and it continued to storm until the sub broke through, Thursday. It was one of those nasty northeasters which never seemed to wear out. The wind blew a gale and for a time the rain fell in sheets.

Those in the party were May Van Doren, Lillian Dries, Lillian Holmes, Mary Holmes, Edith Allen, Elma Ross, Rose Stephenson, Bristol; Janey Baines, Edgely. The group were chaperoned by William H. Harding and Henry Streeter. The Bristol party's headquarters was the cottage of L. J. Bunting, Jr.

Describing the flood, one of the group relates:
Tuesday night the sea broke wild and washed the boardwalk, flooding the streets waist deep in some places. Baltimore avenue was one solid sheet of water. The ocean broke in a torrent over the piers and the buildings along the boardwalk went down like so many cardboard boxes. The boardwalk is a total wreck for over three squares and not worth much the rest of the two miles and a half.

The sea-flood looked like snowbanks in places and autos were nearly buried under shifting sands. Men are at work now shoveling sand out of the streets; it looks considerably like a winter snow-shoveling scene.

On Wednesday afternoon the Sinapuxit May water rose and it took a turn at flooding the town; the water rose all night and people had to be moved from their homes in row-boats when the water reached a floor level. The house near us had three inches of water on the lower floors. We fared better than most, however, as the cottage is built rather high, and the water came to the third step of our front porch. The water quit rising about 5 a. m., Thursday, when the wind which had been howling at 65-mile gale, lulled.

To add to a night of discomfort and uncertainty the electric and gas service were cut off, as were also all telephone and telegraph communications, and later we learned that 35 feet of the bridge connecting the island with the mainland had been washed away, as had also the railroad bridge, and here we were with no light, no fuel with which to cook, and not much food to cook, even if we had the means to cook it.

Thursday we could not buy bread, milk or green groceries and for a while they feared the pumps would be damaged and the city supply of water would be cut off; this, however, did not happen.

Thursday night they brought food-stuff in on barges and unloaded it on trucks at our front door; they are still bringing it in by barge from across the bay, but the water has gone down so much that the unloading is taking place about half a square down the street.

Friday we were able to walk in some parts of the town which is quite an improvement over wading or rowing a boat—commenced to think we were in Venice. We had electric service Thursday night, but still no gas, telephone or telegraph, and the State is at work on the bridge.

The ocean cut three inlets to the bay, between here and Sandy Point, ten miles below here. The closest inlet is about half a mile south of the boardwalk end and completely cuts off the fish camps. The older inhabitants claimed this was the worst the island has been hit in 45 years.

The wrecked bridge was reopened to traffic Sunday evening at six o'clock and the Bristol group returned home.

OFFERS REWARD FOR HIS SLAYERS

Reno, Nev., Aug. 29.—Reno, divorce and gambling capital of the nation, today was plunged into a death mystery with the stakes at $100,000 for the correct solution.

Under the terms of the will of Horace Elliott Wadsworth, who died here on the morning of August 10th, this huge reward will be paid to whoever brings about the conviction of the person who killed him—if it can be shown he was murdered.

The investigation of his death, Wadsworth stipulated, will be a private one with an additional $25,000 offered to prosecute whoever can be shown criminally responsible.

Local police officials regarded the case as closed, but with $100,000 at stake it was certain that there will be a thorough delving into the highways and byways of Reno for any shred of evidence that would point to foul play.

The eastern millionaire died in St. Mary's Hospital, while here, presumably to file a divorce suit. At first it was believed his death resulted from an overdose of sleeping tablets, either taken accidentally or with suicidal intent, or administered by a mysterious killer. After an investigation, however, the coroner conceded that Wadsworth's death was due to alcoholism. This closed the case officially.

Wadsworth's attorney explained that Wadsworth had a fear that he would be killed, but an analysis of his stomach showed no poison, but instead a bad case of ulcers plus "acute alcoholism" was shown. No inquest was ordered.

ALL A MYSTERY TO HER

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 29.—Mrs. Dorothy Clatt White, said today in her home here at Brighton, prosperous Rochester suburb, that the will of her former husband, Horace Elliott Wadsworth, leaving $100,000 to investigate his own death, was as much a mystery to her as to everyone else. Mrs. White refused to let reporters see her 8 year old daughter, Mary Elizabeth Wadsworth, who may inherit Wadsworth's $900,000 estate or a large share of it.

UPPER BLACK EDDY GIRL VICTIM OF AMNESIA

Miss Alverna Alpaugh Taken
Back Home By Her Parents

TO ENTER A HOSPITAL

UPPER BLACK EDDY, Aug. 29.—The finding of a young girl unconscious along the roadway late Saturday night and which for a time mystified authorities, has been solved as a case of amnesia.

Alverna Alpaugh, Bridgeport, Conn., an attractive 18-year-old girl was found Saturday night along a road across from Milford. She was found by Arthur Shaw at about 9.30. During the brief spells she was unable to tell what had happened to her.

Miss Alpaugh had been visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Sybilla Pursell, for the summer and Shaw who found her is a neighbor of the Pursell family.

Dr. F. G. Cope, Riegelsville, was summoned and pronounced the case one of amnesia.

The girl's mother was summoned from Connecticut and arrived yesterday and left last night for Bridgeport with her ill daughter. At the time of leaving here Miss Alpaugh had not as yet recovered her memory but went willingly with her mother.

"I was driving homeward," Shaw relates, "when I saw an object lying in the road. I stopped and got out of my car and found it was Miss Alpaugh. She was unconscious."

Shaw hurried with the girl to the home of her grandmother and then sped to Riegelsville for Dr. Cope. All telephone communication had been disrupted in the up-river town by the storm.

A constant watch has been kept over the girl since. At one point when she regained consciousness yesterday she was asked if she had had anything to drink.

"Not that I know of," she weakly replied and then lapsed into a coma again.

Her parents will have her admitted to a hospital.

CROYDON WOMAN, 91, TRAVELS ALONE; GETS LOST

Leaves Home Unannounced and Goes to Philadelphia to Visit Relatives

FOUND BY THE POLICE

To Mrs. Elizabeth Dager it was an exhausting day of travel that resulted in complete loss of memory.

It happened that Mrs. Dager, who lives with a relative in Croydon, had been vacationing up until last Saturday at the home of a granddaughter, Mrs. Mina Galbraith, at 2310 Coral street, Philadelphia. On that day she was driven back to her Croydon home by her son-in-law, William.

But over the week-end the elderly woman, widow of a Civil War officer and mother of five children, kept thinking of the wonderful days she had spent with the Galbraiths. She longed to be back with them.

She kept thinking it over and over and yesterday reached her decision. She would go back for just another little visit. She wouldn't bother anyone about taking her, certainly she was old enough to care of herself.

So she started from Croydon yesterday morning. In one hand she clutched her purse and a slip of paper on which was written her name and the address of the Galbraiths. She spent the fare eventually and lost the slip of paper.

At 2.30 p. m. she landed at 2nd street and Girard avenue. It was raining and she was tired and frightened. Then suddenly she forgot everything about herself. Her memory went from her like a flickering light fading away from a lowered lamp wick.

She went up to Policeman Doan at the corner and told him she was lost and without memory. He took her to the Front and Master streets station, where a kindly matron managed to worm the name Elizabeth Dager from the almost vacant mind. But the gray-haired woman didn't know whether it was her name or not.

Her description was put on the police teletype and, just as it was being flashed over the wire at Trenton avenue and Dauphin street station, William Galbraith walked into that district headquarters to report that his mother-in-law was missing from her Croydon home. He had learned that from Mrs. Margaret James, with whom Mrs. Dager lives.

He was taken to Front and Master streets station, and when she saw him Mrs. Dager's memory came back in a flash. Galbraith drove her back to his home to see the kiddies before taking her once again to Croydon.

Alden Huckvale Weds Miss Ethel Micklovitz

During the ceremony Miss Grace Korach sang "O Promise Me," and "I Love You Truly." Mrs. George Rauch was matron of honor and Mr. George Rauch served as best man.

The bride was attractively gowned in brown georgette, with accessories to match. She wore a corsage of yellow tea rosebuds. The matron of honor wore a beautiful dress in deep red shade, with black accessories. Her corsage was pink rosebuds. A reception was held at the home of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Huckvale left for a honeymoon trip to New York. Upon their return they will take up their residence with the bride's parents.

A FAITHFUL PUBLIC SERVANT

Bucks County has lost a painstaking, conscientious and indefatigable worker in its behalf in the death of the Hon. Henry W. Watson, representative from the Ninth Congressional District, including Bucks and Lehigh counties.

For nearly 20 years Congressman Watson served his constituency with fidelity. He was ever alert and an active worker for those things which would effect the interests of the district which he represented in the halls of the national legislative body.

Mr. Watson served Bucks County longer than any other congressman and he served with modesty, fidelity and energetically.

His public interest was not confined to Congress but he took an interest in the affairs of his own community, as well.

Coming of an old Quaker family which settled in Bucks County in 1701 he naturally had the welfare of this county at heart. He was first elected to Congress in 1914 as the representative of the adjoining counties of Bucks and Montgomery. He was consecutively re-elected from that district up to last year when, under a congressional reapportionment, Bucks county was aligned with Lehigh county. Mr. Watson was the successful candidate from the new district and triumphed despite the Democratic landslide of that year.

Mr. Watson was a protective tariff champion because he knew the value of a protective tariff to the varied industries of his district. He traveled extensively abroad and knew at first hand the competition American labor had in cheap European labor.

Congressman Watson built up a reputation for attending to the minutest details and those in the two counties which he represented, soon learned that they had a congressman who was active in their behalf; one who was always busy in his work and one who took his duties seriously and worked tirelessly for those who had elected him.

The death of Congressman Watson is a real loss to the Ninth Congressional District. He was admired and respected for his grasp of public affairs in the halls of Congress and his associates in Washington learned to respect his opinions and his honesty and integrity of character.

PREDICTING 800 M. P. H. SPEED

Watching from the security of the house, the thoroughly alarmed populace was surprised to see crew and passengers on the first railroad train charge alive after their adventurous journey. And when it was predicted that some day steam would carry a human cargo at the breakneck speed of 15 miles an hour there were timid souls who said the human body could not survive such speed.

How times have changed! The other day Wiley Post casually remarked that airplanes will eventually attain a speed of 800 miles an hour and nobody doubted him. Such things are taken for granted today.

The heavier-than-air flying machine was made possible by the internal combustion or gasoline engine. The gasoline engine proved unequal to a speed of 800 miles an hour, but that will not stop the aeronautical engineers.

HOLLYWOOD.—Virginia Cherrill needn't worry about Cary Grant while she's away in Honolulu, for the tall Paramount actor is going to be swamped with work.

As soon as he finishes the Mae West picture, Cary is scheduled to take the leading role in "Come on Marines," a brand new story by Phillip Wylie to fit the title that Paramount once announced for a Buddy Rogers-Richard Arlen vehicle.

In the revised version, Cary will play an Annapolis cadet who leaves the naval academy with his courage under question, but who proves himself under another name, fighting with the marines in a Central American revolution.

The role will be virtually a starring one for Cary and he'll start it some time in September.

Take it from Marie Dressler, bankers have a sense of humor too. She met one in Santa Barbara recently and he said:

"For years I've been wanting to meet someone who can make people cry and laugh too. I've only been able make them cry."

HOLLYWOOD PARADE.

Wrestler Gus Sonnenburg can't forget his estranged wife, Judith Allen. In Rio to get a friendly divorce, he is having his car shipped back to Hollywood to put at Judith's disposal.

Considering the billing he'll receive, the giant Primo Carnera will make a studio appearance of record brevity. Five days will see him through with his part at M-G-M. Those five days, however, will find every free executive and player on the lot visiting the set in the hopes that either Primo or Max will let a real one fly. Originally expected on Thursday, Carnera slips in here to night in a private car. Studio executives hope to persuade both him and Raer to dress up in evening clothes and make an appearance next Tuesday night for the "Dinner at Eight" premiere at Grauman's Chinese Theatre.

Ginger Rogers' rna is turning fan magazine writer. She's the author of several plays, you know. . . . Would you call this an English sense of humor? Someone told Mimi Jordan the other day that her slip was showing. Just as a test, she left it that way all day. Thirty-three people called her attention to it.

The Marquis Henry de la Palaise will not lose a foot of the film that he had to keep on ice during his stay in Bali. . . . Wallace Smith's gay novel, "The Captain Hates the Sea," is in its seventh edition. . . . Arthur Sheekman and Nat Perrin will write for Samuel Goldwyn for the next three years. . . . Labor Day will see Irene Dunne's husband, Dr. Francis Griffen, on his way back to New York.

John Barrymore is due here the first of the week. . . . Did you know that Sally Eilers' brother, Bud, also acts in the films. He's doing a small part in Sally's current picture, "Walls of Gold." . . . Edmund Anthony Brown, the original "Whitie" of "Queer People," is turned actor for Mae West's picture, "I'm No Angel." . . . And of all the amateur scenarios, I like best the one turned in by a bookbust near the Fox Western Avenue studio. In the big scene, the hero walks into the kitchen, discovers his cook murdered and says:

"Well, I guess we'll have to get a new cook. This one is dead."

DID YOU KNOW—

That Wallace Berry is a lieutenant commander in the U. S. Naval Reserve, a battalion chief in the Los Angeles Fire Department, an inspector of the Immigration Department, a lieutenant in the L. A. Air Police, a deputy fish and game commissioner, a deputy U. S. forest ranger and a licensed U. S. transport pilot?

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

Driving in silence, Slug chafed him through a succession of sunny and commonplace Hollywood streets until they arrived at the minor business thoroughfare of Western Avenue. Finding a convenient space, Slug parked the car.

Across the street was a three-story building, the lower floors occupied by small stores. Midway of the building was an entrance and stairs leading to the cheap apartments on the upper floors.

"It's straight down the hall on the second floor," said Slug. "The last door on the right."

Cavanaugh discarded the sombrero and bandanna. Chances of capture, now, were negligible. He put on his Panama and coat. He was in excellent spirits—elastic and athletic-looking in his gray suit with the dark blue tie.

Two young girls in passing glanced at him with interested eyes, but he ignored them.

"Well, so long, Slug. Thanks a lot for everything."

Neither bothered to shake hands. "Better take me along with you."

"Two's a party and three's a crowd," grinned Cavanaugh.

"Shall I wait with the car?"

"Absolutely not. I'll be okay—take care of yourself, Slug."

"How about a red—want to borrow mine?"

"I've got my own," lied Cavanaugh to save argument.

He was not armed because he had never, at any time, felt the need of a weapon. A rod, actually, was not necessary to an agile man with a cool brain. As a means of defense it was uncertain and its powers of accomplishment were nil.

"In case you don't come out," said Slug, "how about Miss Luneska? Want me to send her some kind of a message?"

"If I don't come out—just forget everything. But don't worry."

Slug stepped on the starter.

"Well, I'll be seen' you."

"Sure you will."

Cavanaugh carried an atmosphere of extreme well-being with him across the street and several passers-by noticed him with approval. He had the air of a happy young man.

In the entrance he paused and looked negligently at the names of the letter boxes. This was mere idle curiosity. Poletzki's name was not visible—it wouldn't be.

Cavanaugh's mission was not in the least light-hearted, yet he was beginning to feel a physical thrill.

It was like driving a high-powered car over a dangerous mountain road, or staking his last twenty dollars on the wheel, or diving from a high spring board into a pool.

Cavanaugh opened the glass door and started to go up the thinly-carpeted stairs. His throat was just a little dry. He was climbing on the balls of his feet. The place smelled a trifle stale. The tenants, quite obviously, cooked at home. An inconspicuous and commonplace hideaway for a man in Poletzki's position, Cavanaugh was whistling softly.

Whenever he was gambling for high stakes he always whistled and kept a level head.

A middle-aged woman with a market basket on her arm passed him on the stairs. He stepped aside, smiled, took off his hat. The woman thought him the nicest young man she had seen in a long time and her day brightened.

Thereafter, Cavanaugh did not smile.

He did not know exactly how he would get into Poletzki's apartment. Perhaps the man would not be at home. In that case he would have to commit burglary. To knock on the door and find out would be a simple method. Simple, but superlatively dangerous.

No one could fathom what reaction might be expected from abruptly disturbing a murderous, drug-drenched, abnormal mind. . . .

At the same moment that Lucky Cavanaugh, with every sense alert, was approaching Poletzki's door, Leni Luneska, in her own elaborate home, was conscious of a tightened sensation around her heart.

As soon as one worry was over another took its place. One wave of anxiety after another. Her life had become a mighty storm of these waves.

It was beyond her comprehension.

For a brief truce with fate she and Cavanaugh had glimpsed a golden peace. It had been so beautifully short—that last brief half hour together in her bedroom.

The reaction was setting in. It was no good blinking the facts. He might come back to her sound and free, or the next time she saw him he might be . . . dead!

Somebody had shot and killed a woman in his apartment. He had told Mulrooney, in her presence, that the fatal shot had been meant for him. . . .

The startling truth was that she knew little or nothing about Lucky Cavanaugh. Knew even less about the death-dodging complications of his dangerous existence.

She had gone back to her bedroom in a futile effort to recapture something of the happiness that Cavanaugh had taken with him when he left. The print of his head was still upon one of the pillows. . . .

"Forgive me, madame."

It was Celeste bearing a small wicker tray crowded with more than a hundred letters. All of them had been opened and read at the studio. These were a few of the most interesting ones out of the daily thousands.

The maid put the fan mail upon a low table beside an easy chair. All of these letters had been answered already by Leni's secretary at the studio. They came from all parts of the world. In times past they had stimulated Leni's ambition. Now they were meaningless bits of paper.

"You take them away, Celeste."

Celeste's face saddened. Her mis-treasure was constantly disappointing her. This slim French girl in her shaste black dress anguished over Leni like a mother hen.

"What has happened, madame?" she begged in a worried voice.

"Something it is wrong? Is it sickness?"

Leni turned her face away from the girl. Those intent brown eyes, distressed and sympathetic, were like question marks, eternally demanding answers.

"Please go away," Leni whispered wearily. "I am perfectly well. I don't care what you do, Celeste—only leave me alone."

Celeste took the letters out, her shoulders drooping slightly as she left.

Still in her lounging pajamas with the cloth of gold jacket, Leni flung herself upon the bed. She tried to think, but her problems could not be reached by thought.

More than anything else on earth she wanted to hear Lucky Cavanaugh's voice.

Sitting up in bed she reached the telephone book for his number and failed to find it. Then she did a foolish thing.

She laid her face into the hollow that his head had left upon the silken pillow. It was a silly effort and it brought her no satisfaction at all.

It is an odd thing about the way the human mind operates under heavy pressure of fear. It swings like a pendulum from extreme to another.

In her heart, Lucky Cavanaugh and Herman Gerstenfeld were as far apart as east and west.

Leni picked up the telephone and called the studio.

There was a subtle change in the voice of the operator. "I don't think Mr. Gerstenfeld will answer his phone, Miss Luneska," said she voice. "He gave orders not to be disturbed."

"Is a conference going on?"

"No, he's alone."

"Then there's no reason why you shouldn't ring him."

But there was a very good reason and the operator knew it. Gerstenfeld had ordered everybody out of his office in a burst of temper that shook the studio walls. The gossip was flying from office to office that he had literally kicked Ned Wingate out of the luxurious private office. Those stories get around rapidly on the lot. Gerstenfeld seldom blew up but the rumor, this time, was that he had become a regular volcano.

"Please ring him," said Leni. "I'll take the responsibility."

Leni waited a long time. The operator at the other end left the switch open so she could hear the buzzing in Gerstenfeld's office. Then, suddenly, his voice leaped like crackling fire through the wires.

"What in blazes do you want?"

The instrument in Leni's hand shook a little.

"I want to talk to you—if you can be a little polite," she said half-humorously. "This is Leni!"

BEHIND THE SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL.
Copyright, 1933, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

—In the general excitement over the reunion of Greta Garbo and John Gilbert, Hollywood has almost forgotten about Laurence Olivier.

The English actor will be well repaid, however, for the hurried trip from London and the anticlimactic finish when studio officials decided he was not tall enough to play opposite La Garbo.

Before sailing for Honolulu yesterday with his wife, Jill Esmond, Olivier signed one of the most unusual contracts of recent film annals.

Over a period of years, he can return to Hollywood at his own convenience and make pictures for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The contract has options but he, and not the studio, has the right to take them up.

Meanwhile, the actor must return to Broadway after a brief vacation to take the leading role in Jed Harris' production, "The Green Bay Tree."

HIBERNIANS WILL MEET HULMEVILLE TONIGHT

Seeking to even up the Lower Bucks County League championship series, the Hibernians will meet the Hulmeville A. A. team tonight on the Hulmeville diamond. The Hulmevilleites took the lead in the series last Friday night by stopping the Hibs, 7-1.

The Hibernians looked bad in the tilt last week, making seven errors which proved costly and spoiled a fine pitching performance by "Eddie" Sullivan. Each team made seven bingles. "Howie" Black, who twirled the Hulmeville nine to victory in the first game of the series, will again toe the mound. Black has rested since the first game and his arm is in fine shape. He expects to again trim the Hibs. Black's battery mate will be either "Johnny" Hemp or "Bill" Mende.

The remainder of the line-up will be: Bruce, Leigh, Rockhill and Comly in the infield, with Haeger, Bilger and Watson in the outfield.

Manager McDewitt of the Hibs will probably start either Hines or Sullivan on the mound, with Lyczak doing the receiving. Foster will be on first; Thompson, second; Gleason, short; Dougherty, third; and the outfield, McGinley, Roe and Dugan, with Rado in reserve.

The series is a five-game affair with the third game being scheduled on St. Ann's field for Friday night.

The game will begin at six o'clock, sharp.

BUCKS COUNTY NETMEN LOSE TO TRENTON PAIR

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 29.—Two Bucks County tennis players went down to defeat yesterday before their Trenton opponents. Herb Lawrence was defeated by Kuser in semi-finals, 6-3, 6-4, while Black won over Frank Blank, Langhorne, 9-7, 6-2.

Blank almost made the grade against Boyd in the better of the two penultimate battles, but was unable to counter Bob's late spurt. The steady Langhorne ace ran up a 5-2 lead in the first set and held the advantage in the eighth game on his own service. But he faltered and Boyd deuced the game, won it, captured the next two games and evened the set at 5-5. Blank here broke through his foe's delivery to take four straight points and the eleventh game to lead 6-5, only to lose his own service again. Both won their deliveries and were all square at 7-7. Bob won a deuced game to forge ahead, 8-7, and then took a love game off Blank's service for the set.

In the second set Boyd ran roughshod as Blank cracked, 6-2. Only once in the match did Blank attempt a forehand drive, and on that occasion he netted it. He gambled entirely on soft backhand and underhand shots.

Kuser outgeneraled Lawrence in another sterling semi-final match. The flashy Bristol ace and former University of Pennsylvania star, served masterfully, but was unable to cope with Fritz's driving, baseline game. Three times Herb served aces to draw applause from the 300 fans present.

CROYDON

The Bucks County Rescue Squad of Croydon accepted the invitation of the Interstate Firemen to join their parade last Saturday in Burlington. The passing of their new ambulance caused much applause along the route and during the parade they demonstrated their skill in first aid work with two patients, who were brought to their attention. Joseph Laws of Parkland, a Red Cross instructor, who is greatly interested in the squad, has offered to give them 10 weeks' instruction. Those passing the test will receive Red Cross certificates. They are now in possession of a first aid kit.

Mrs. Leo Magee suffered a heart attack on Friday and was the first person revived by the use of the kit and the knowledge of the squad.

Mr. and Mrs. Batholoma, of Philadelphia, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. Batholoma over the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. William Johnston last week entertained Mr. Barlow of New York.

While practicing, Curry, catcher for Y. M. A., was hit in the eye with a ball, suffering a very painful injury.

CHECK CATTLE THEFTS

MISSOULA, Mont.—(INS)—The Montana livestock commission stationed inspectors at seven points on the Wyoming and Idaho border in its fight against the transportation of stolen cattle from the state. Ranchers in the border counties declared they had been losing cattle through the operations of out-of-state truckers who brought produce into the state and took stolen cattle into other states for sale to questionable dealers.

Recent tests in northern Colorado fields showed that the machine was capable of topping from six to seven acres of beets daily.

meteoric. He was a man of convictions and a thorough believer in Republican principles. He served his constituents conscientiously and with meticulous attention to detail.

He first entered Congress in 1914. He learned the ropes readily and soon became an influential figure in Washington, though he seldom raised his voice above the quiet conversational tone which eliminated the element of the spectacular from his speeches.

On the ways and means committee of the House, he wielded for over a decade a tremendous power, but he carried his honors without ostentation.

Sir Walter and the Injuns

By BURNLEY

Walter JOHNSON
BIG CHIEF OF THE CLEVELAND INJUNS!

THERE HAS BEEN A LOT OF DISSENSION AMONG THE INDIANS, BUT BIG BARNEY SHOWED 'EM THAT HE WAS BOSS!

WHEN Billy Evans nominated Walter Johnson to succeed Peckinpaugh as manager of the Cleveland Indians, his action met with widespread approval among the fans. Johnson is one of the real heroes of the diamond pastime, and he, if anybody, deserves a managerial post with a big league club.

However, according to reports, the Cleveland players didn't take so kindly to the change. Peckinpaugh was well-liked by his men, and many of the Indians were openly disgruntled at his sudden removal. So it can easily be seen that Johnson was moving into a tough spot when he took over the reins as Peck's successor.

tough spots during his playing career, and he usually came through with flying colors. This time was no exception.

He was plain "Henry" to his confreres in Congress and at home.

The innate modesty of the man was attested by his autobiography in the "Congressional Directory," which occupied four lines. It was confined to the fact that he was an attorney and a bare recital of his long list of elections.

During the World War he stood squarely behind President Wilson, doubtless an outcropping of the English breeding which was his on both sides. The true Englishman is always for the government in times of stress.

Where Mr. Watson stood at home was demonstrated last Fall, when he was returned by a comfortable margin in a Democratic year against a Democrat who was also experienced and in a district in which the majority of the voters knew Mr. Watson only by reputation.

There could hardly be a stronger endorsement of character or a greater reward for loyal service than was accorded him by the people of Lehigh, who preferred Mr. Watson to a candidate of their own at a time when protest was rampant and the voters were swinging in swarms from the Hoover leadership.

In the Watson record believers in democratic government and institutions may well find a never-failing spring of encouragement.

THE VETERAN OF A PENNA. TRADITION

The Congressman's close identification with the welfare of Eastern Pennsylvania gave him a local fame partly obscuring his national significance. But the larger aspect should not be overlooked. In fact, Mr. Watson often appeared to advantage during periods when his party leaders were eclipsed. Twice in his career the Democrats came into power amid circumstances which rendered the duties of a minority difficult. One was in the World War and the other was in the recent depression. The war crisis developed a hysteria which often confused Administration support with patriotism. Honest criticism was almost silenced and Republicans were frequently embarrassed in a desire to be helpful and constructive.

How Mr. Watson met this situation may be recalled from his vote against tabling the McLemore resolution to keep American ships off the high seas. It was a measure of pacifist origin which the country deeply resented. President Wilson based the issue of loyalty on voting to table the motion. Mr. Watson refused to support the

Official Relationship Ended

Here is pictured the last conference between President Roosevelt and Professor Raymond Moley, head of the famous "Brain Trust," who created something of a sensation in Washington by resigning his post as Assistant Secretary of State. Moley announced he would associate himself with Vincent Astor in the establishment of a new political magazine.

U. S. Scotland Yard Planned By Moley to Combat Crime

In Reported Federal Shake-up

Reports are current in Washington to the effect that Assistant Secretary of State Raymond Moley, who was entrusted by President Roosevelt with the task of planning a Federal offensive on the nation's criminal element, in conjunction with Attorney General Cummings, will take a big step in his campaign by reorganizing the Department of Justice and the formation of an American replica of England's Scotland Yard. Moley's plans also call for the elimination of J. Edgar Hoover as Chief of the Bureau of Investigation, it is believed. Moley's objective is to amalgamate the different bureaus that comprise the Department of Justice into one, which will be available to State authorities in combating crime.

By ROY WILLIS
Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON, (I. N.).—Always the center of a whirlwind of rumor, Assistant Secretary of State Raymond Moley is once more the subject of much speculation here as whispers of reorganization in the Department of Justice are heard hither and yon in every corner of the capital.

SHAKE-UP PREDICTED
Since Moley was entrusted by President Roosevelt with the job of planning a Federal offensive on the nation's criminal element, it has been expected that the shining star of the "Brain Trust" would begin the task by giving his attention to the Department of Justice. Now it looks as if he is about to do so. It is known Moley has ambitious plans for the prosecution of Uncle Sam's drive against racketeers, kidnapers and others of criminal ilk who cost law-abiding Americans hundreds of millions of dollars every year.

One of these plans calls for the organization of an American Scotland Yard, another for the elimination of J. Edgar Hoover as Chief of the Bureau of Investigation.

As for the first plan, it is known that Moley is dissatisfied with the system whereby the government has several thousand agents spread all over the country, working for different bureaus. Moley would amalgamate them in one bureau, which would correspond to an organization similar to England's famous Scotland Yard.

At present the Bureau of Investigation has 710 detectives on its payroll; Post Office Inspection about 1,000; Internal Revenue 355; Department of the Interior 200; the Prohibition Bureau more than 800, and the Treasury 145.

SCOTLAND YARD METHODS
It is probable, too, that similar methods to those used by the great

British man-hunting aggregation may be introduced if, and when, the new organization comes into being. Scotland Yard works only on the invitation of local authorities or the government itself. It is always ready to take up a case that has proved too difficult for the regular police to handle, but it does not "butt in" until called upon.

Similarly the proposed Federal corps of super-sleuths would be available to State authorities whenever needed. Even before any reorganization has taken place, Federal authorities have proved remarkably efficient in solving some of the country's major crimes, notably kidnappings. The most recent example of Federal efficiency was the arrest of Harvey Bailey, notorious gangster, wanted in connection with the Kansas City massacre of four officers and a convict and also a suspect in the kidnapping of Charles F. Urschel, Oklahoma oil millionaire. Twelve others were rounded up with Bailey in connection with the crimes.

HOOVER MAY GO
Rumor is persistent in asserting that Moley's first step towards rebuilding the Department of Justice will be the ousting of J. Edgar Hoover, of whose methods the Brain Trust head does not approve. Hoover has been with the department since 1917, and since 1924 has been its head. But he made many enemies in the capital during his tenure of office by his practice of sleuthing against so-called radicals in Congress. One powerful enemy he made was the late Senator Tom Walsh of Montana, who died on the eve of taking office as Attorney General in the Roosevelt Cabinet. Walsh was quoted as saying at the time of his appointment that his first official act would be to seek the ousting of Hoover.
